A Ceres man has been confirmed as having died when a Mexican fishing boat filled with U.S. tourists capsized in the Gulf of California.

Leslie Yee, 63, was among 27 fishing enthusiasts who were thrown overboard in the middle of the night Sunday during a freak storm.

Two Twain Harte men — Mark Dorland, 62, and Al Mein, 61 — also were on that boat and remain missing. Two Sonora men and a man from Ripon who were on that trip have been rescued and are safe.

Yee's Ceres family was told the bad news by the U.S. Consulate on Monday. His body reportedly was identified by two close friends who were on the trip with him.

"He was a good man," said his sister-in-law Felicia Marte of Modesto. She said he was a retired transportation manager and the father of three. He had lived in Ceres about six years.

There's been no other confirmed deaths, but news about the tragedy is coming out in bits and pieces at a time as survivors call home to tell about the ordeal.

The Ripon man on the boat, Joseph Beeler, 59, spent 15 hours on the water before being rescued, his wife said this morning.

After he went into the water, he grabbed an ice cooler to stay afloat, then spent hours adrift on a panga boat with a friend before being rescued by the U.S. Coast Guard, according to Theresa Beeler.

"He was very fortunate," she said. "We're so thankful. This has been quite a harrowing experience."

Mexican rescuers were scouring the Gulf of California today for seven missing tourists.

Joseph Beeler told his wife that a storm blew in about 2:30 a.m. Sunday, and he was thrown from his bed. He told her that he and everyone else had about a minute to get off the boat before it capsized.

He said he had just enough time to put his pants on. He said once he was in the water, life jackets, ice coolers and the panga boat — a smaller boat used by fishermen — emerged from the sunken larger vessel.
